[SECTION 8] Civil Rights-Aren't We Glad for Small Racist Corrections in East Bay? So, an East Bay city has spent $143,000 so far on social services in response to an African American teenage boy who hung a Confederate flag from his car's rear view mirror. What happens next? A city that has a chance to spend that kind of money on education and public services for minorities, impoverished, and out-of-work? Or to build more low-income housing?
How about some more economic development projects to help the minority community? This isn't a "lifestyle choice" issue. It's racism, plain and simple. Are we only looking out for our own? "We can't educate everybody," [San Jose City Council] Chairwoman Linda Lyons tells the Mercury News. "We can't provide every one with a house. This is just the right thing to do." In the East Bay, there is always the obvious answer that is wrong, stupid, and needs to be fixed. But there is also a more fundamental question to ask that is always overlooked: Does the rest of the country care? So, does the rest of the country care about East Bay racism? Or is it okay? You are standing in the middle of a racially, historically, and culturally divided community. In a community where the majority of residents suffer economic hard times. That is the pain that is felt when police from Black neighborhoods stop whites and arrest them. It is the pain felt by Whites when whites are beaten in the streets by gangs. It's the pain felt when an African American kid is arrested for not paying rent. So, the question of whether the rest of the country cares is much more complex than a simple "yes/no" answer. That's why the "rest of the country" needs to take a side. By explaining these facts, the rest of the country will know that the East Bay is a community that needs help 648931e174
